

Group forums

Loomio group collaboration tool.

- Quick into to Loomio
- Hosted groups
- Link to chat services

Quick into to Loomio

Loomio is a highly advanced group collaboration and decision-making tool for horizontal organisations.

You can find our public groups here.

This page is a work in progress.

Hosted groups

Expanding on the old Freegamedev.net service of hosting phpBB sub-forums for project coordination, it will soon be possible to request Loomio groups. Once a new group is created, we can designate a group-admin to take over control.

Loomio groups are fully self-managed and group-admins can create new sub-groups by themselves. Group membership is also on an individual group level and members can be added or removed easily.

User-creation is open to existing F-hub.org members via the Continue with Oauth button. This will redirect to the main Forgejo page and request permissions to access email and user name. Once this is done, single click login is available.

Existing group-admins can also create secret invite links for quickly on-boarding external users easily (please do not share in large public chat groups). Alternatively groups can be configured to show a public request membership link, where people can sign-up with their email and group-admins can manually approve their accounts.

If a user wishes to upgrade their external email login based account to a full F-hub.org account, all they need to do is use the "merge account" feature in their profile settings.

This page is still under construction.

Link to chat services

Loomio can be easily linked to external chat services.

For now, refer to the official documentation on this here.

We are currently working on a more stream-lined integration with our own hybrid chat network.

This page is a work in progress.