Hosted groups

Expanding on the old Freegamedev.net service of hosting phpBB sub-forums for project coordination, it is possible to request Loomio groups. Once a new group is created, we can designate a group-admin to take over control.

Loomio groups are fully self-managed and group-admins can create new sub-groups by themselves. Group membership is also on an individual group level and members can be added or removed easily.

The Loomio group forums specifically are open to registration via email. This was enabled to ease on-boarding of new users into groups and F-hub.org itself. If a registered Loomio user later gets a full F-hub.org account, they can merge it to their existing account in the Loomio profile settings via Oauth2.

Direct user-creation is also open to existing F-hub.org members via the Continue with F-hub.org Oauth2 button. This will redirect to the main Forgejo page and request permissions to access email and user name. Once this is done, single click login is available.

Existing group-admins can also create invite links for on-boarding external users easily. Alternatively groups can be configured to show a public request membership link, where people can sign-up with their email and group-admins can manually approve their accounts.

This page is still under construction.
